► Infection risk less than one in a million for hepatitis B, less than one in 50 million for hepatitis C and less than one in three billion for HIV, officials say

An Ottawa clinic that performed endoscopic procedures is where 6,800 people may have been exposed to HIV and hepatitis B and C, officials with Ottawa Public Health (OPH) say.

At a news conference yesterday, medical officer of health Dr. Isra Levy named Dr. Christiane Farazli as the operator of the clinic, located at 1081 Carling Ave.

"In the late spring the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario inspected a clinic in Ottawa. The inspection found some infection-prevention and cleaning protocols were not always being followed," said Levy. He said there is no way to know for how long those protocols, which involve complex steps and the use of active chemicals, were not followed. As a result, all patients who attended the clinic between April 2002 and last June, when the college ordered the clinic to stop performing endoscopic procedures, are being contacted and advised they have a slight risk of being infected.

Farazli is working with OPH, according to a statement issued by the city, but she wasn't at the press conference and she wasn't available for comment yesterday.

"I sincerely regret that the issues that were identified in my facility occurred and I apologize for any inconvenience or anxiety that patients may experience upon receiving this notification," said Farazli in the city issued statement.

Patient shocked clinic posed infection risk

Dr. Christiane Farazli's internal medicine clinic was closed yesterday as Ottawa Public Health announced her clinic's sterilization practices weren't up to snuff and were the source of a weekend announcement that several thousand people may have been exposed to an infection risk.

About 6,800 of her patients will receive letters from Ottawa Public Health advising them to get tested for HIV and hepatitis B and C because her clinic failed to properly clean and disinfect equipment used for gastroscopies and colonoscopies.

Adelaide Male will likely receive a letter. She and her husband Sidney found out the clinic was responsible for the scare as they left an-Carling Ave and encountered a gaggle of reporters outside of Farazli's locked door.

"My family doctor sent me to her and I went there in good faith ... never thinking that this would happen," said Adelaide when she learned about sterilization problems at the clinic where she had a colonoscopy last spring.

The risk to Adelaide Male, or any of Farazli's patients, is miniscule, according to Ottawa Public Health. But that doesn't reassure Adelaide, she said.

"No, not in this day and age," she said. "I don't think in this day and age it should be happening."

College urges PM to grow a mo

► Local broadcasting students post YouTube video calling for Harper to support Movember campaign

Algonquin College's student-run radio station is trying to convince Prime Minister Stephen Harper to grow a moustache in support of next month's Movember campaign.

The station might have to up the ante, though, after a government spokesperson said Harper's upper lip will stay bare this November.

"While the Prime Minister will not be growing a moustache this year, he does wish the organizers of this year's campaign every success in raising funds and in increasing awareness of prostate cancer," read an email statement from Andrew MacDougall, the Prime Minister's Office associate director of communications.

$76.8M
The global Movember campaign raised $76.8 million last year, $22.3 million of which came from the Canadian campaign.

CKDJ 107.9 program manager Ryan Gibson is confident he'll gather the 10,000 signatures he is seeking to convince the prime minister otherwise.

"I'll keep pushing for him to grow one until the end," said Gibson, who is also a radio broadcasting student. "He takes his role as a politician quite seriously and I think, just for bringing attention to Movember, there's no other high profile person in the country than the prime minister."

The station tried the same campaign last year, but was unsuccessful. Funds raised from the Canada-wide campaign will go to Prostate Cancer Canada.

Gibson's uncle's battle with prostate cancer is one of his motivations for restarting the campaign. He may have to focus his effort on Mrs. Harper, though, after she said last year she wouldn't be very fond of a moustache on her hubby.

"The wife is usually always in charge, regardless if you sit in the top chair in the country," said Gibson, with a laugh.

Last November, a number of MPs grew moustaches in support of the Canadian campaign, including Liberal Justin Trudeau and New Democrat Peter Stoffer.

Gibson said people can sign his petition at facebook.com/ckdjmovember. prostate cancer.

► CKDJ 107.9 released this promo poster of Prime Minister Stephen Harper sporting a moustache to convince him to grow a real one for Movember.

Hubley breaks silence after son's suicide

► City councillor says Jamie Hubley was loved, accepted by family, but had trouble seeing positive side of life

JESSICA SMITH
@METRONEWS.CA

Kanata South Coun. Allan Hubley spoke yesterday about his son's suicide — saying his “beautiful boy” was a compassionate, talented child who struggled with depression and bullying over his sexuality before he took his own life.

“This past Friday, our family suffered one of the worst experiences that can happen to a family when we lost our boy — Jamie. To make this even more difficult, his death was the result of suicide,” said Hubley in a statement released yesterday afternoon.

Hubley said Jamie was bullied for years. In Grade 7 Jamie was treated cruelly for preferring figure skating to hockey and in high school he was called vicious names for putting up posters for the school's Rainbow Club, which were torn down.

Jamie's family met with the school administration to try to end the bullying,

“We will not say that the bullying was the only reason for Jamie's decision to take his one life, but it was definitely a factor,” said Hubley. “We must do whatever we can to wipe out bullying for any reason in our society and especially in our schools.”

Jamie “didn't have a mean bone in his body” and worked with his father on helping others in the community.

“Although James had a great many people who loved and supported him, something in his mind kept taking him to a dark place where he could not see the positive side of life,” Hubley said. “Jamie is free of his pain now and there is a new angel, but we have paid too high a price.”

Jamie was receiving counselling and treatment at the Children's Hospital of Eastern Ontario for depression, said Hubley, adding his son struggled with his sexuality and being judged about it by others.

Hubley thanked the people who have supported his family as they cope with James's death. The family is asking for privacy.

“I need time to deal with the pain of not being able to save my precious boy,” Hubley said.

The family asks everyone wishing to make a donation in Jamie's memory to direct it to the Youth Services Bureau Mental Health Walk-in Clinic.

Students join Jamie's cause

Before he killed himself, Jamie Hubley was trying to build up the Rainbow Club, a gay-straight alliance, at his school.

“He was the leader,” said his friend Steph Wheeler.

Now, another student at A.Y. Jackson Secondary School wants to step up in his place and more students say they want to join.

“It's to raise awareness, because there are so many people who are struggling with this. I think we should show as much support as we can,” said Wheeler.

A few weeks before he died, Hubley gave Wheeler a rainbow bracelet with the word “Pride” on it that he planned to give out to other students to promote the gay-straight alliance, she said. Now, Wheeler is selling the same style of bracelet as a fundraiser for Jer's Vision, a charity that works to stop homophobic bullying.

Hubley's father, Coun. Allan Hubley, said when his son put up posters for the club they were torn down and “he was called vicious names in the hallways and online.”

Jamie Hubley also wrote about how hard it was to be out at his school.

“I hate being the only open gay guy in my school. It f—ing sucks, I really want to end it,” he wrote on his blog.

Wheeler said that now that he is gone, there are no other openly gay students at A.Y. Jackson, that she knows of.

Jeremy Dias, the founder of Jer's Vision, said gay-straight alliances are becoming more common and are a great way to engage straight students and prevent homophobic bullying.

“It's a really great initiative for youth to get engaged and make a difference and do something helpful and fantastic,” Dias said.

BRA Day to support breast-cancer survivors

The very first BRA Day (Breast Reconstruction Awareness Day), takes place across the country tomorrow.

BRA day is intended to educate and promote awareness and access for post-mastectomy breast reconstruction via community-based events and a new online resource — bra-day.com.

"When I realized that I was going to have to undergo mastectomy, my attention was focused on both my health and on my recovery following surgery," said breast-cancer survivor Jodi Brown. "Reconstructive surgery restored my self-esteem and made me feel complete again."

"I think it is important for every woman diagnosed with breast cancer to know her options early on and know that, after the emotional and physical hurdles, you can get back to being yourself."

A U.S. Catholic priest who supports ordination for women was detained briefly by police yesterday after marching to the Vatican to press the Holy See to lift its ban on women priests.

The Rev. Roy Bourgeois and supporters marched down the main boulevard to the Vatican with a banner "Ordain Catholic Women" and chanting outside St. Peter's Square "What do we want? Women priests! When do we want them? Now!"

Chile demands military volunteers

Chile is giving nearly 57,000 18-year-olds one month to report for potential military duty, saying the government needs to fill gaps in its armed forces because a nationwide student protest movement has reduced the number of volunteers it usually gets.

Military service is obligatory in Chile, but there are usually enough volunteers to fill the ranks so no one serves against their will.

Vargas blamed the student movement that has been campaigning for education reform since April for leading thousands of young people to boycott schools, thus closing doors to military recruiters.

Four rescued in possible fraud scheme

► Police investigate whether woman was stealing hostages' disability checks

Police investigating why four mentally disabled adults were found locked in a dark and squalid basement say the discovery of dozens of pieces of identification points to a wide-ranging fraud scheme.

The four adults were rescued over the weekend when the building's landlord shined a flashlight behind a steel door that had been chained shut. One adult had been shackled to the boiler, police said. The space was too small for an adult to stand upright, and it reeked of waste from the buckets the four had used as toilets.

Police are looking into whether the suspects were holding the four people hostage and collecting their disability cheques, police spokeswoman Tanya Little said.

"Without a doubt, this is just the beginning of this investigation," Lt. Ray Evers told The Associated Press.

Charges of criminal conspiracy, aggravated assault, kidnapping, criminal trespass, unlawful restraint, false imprisonment and related offences were filed Sunday against Linda Ann Weston, 51, Gregory Thomas, 47, and Eddie Wright, 50.

The people found in the basement — a 29-year-old woman and men aged 31, 35, and 41 — have the mental capacity of 10-year-olds, police said. Little said they appeared to have no physical problems other than malnourishment.

Passersby ignore toddler in hit-and-run

A grisly video of a Chinese toddler hit by a van has sparked outrage and disbelief in Chinese media.

Closed-circuit camera footage posted on YouTube and Youku, a Chinese video-sharing site, shows that the two-year-old, identified by the China Daily newspaper as Yueyue, was left writhing in a street as roughly a dozen pedestrians, cyclists and motorists passed by inside a market in Foshan, a city in China's southern Guangdong province.

The passersby all also ignored the girl's bloody body. A rickshaw driver, a motorcyclist and even a woman hand-in-hand with a young child noticed the toddler but neglected to stop. The girl was run over a second time by a light-duty truck.

After the driver struck the girl, he paused, his vehicle straddling the girl's torso, before driving forward, running her over a second time. At press time there were conflicting reports as to whether the girl had survived. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Why CETA is a bad deal for Canada

Canada and the European Union are negotiating a new Comprehensive Economic and Trade Agreement (CETA). This is a big deal for Canada and so far, negotiations have been quietly taking place behind closed doors.

If CETA is signed it will:

- Threaten our democracy by putting corporate rights first
- Encourage privatization of Canada's drinking water and wastewater services
- Threaten local job creation and "buy-local" policies
- Cause prescription drug costs to skyrocket by at least $2.8 billion per year
- Allow big corporations to ignore or challenge environmental regulation

LIES MY TV TOLD ME

SHE SAYS ...

JESSICA NAPIER
METRO

I grew up on a steady diet of sitcoms. Before the days of Angry Birds and social networking, I turned to cable television for my nightly fix of mindless entertainment. And even though the programs were fictional, the zany antics of attractive ensemble casts started seeming pretty plausible after the second or third rerun. Here are seven sitcom myths I had to unlearn once I realized that real life isn't an after school special.

1. Having a career is just a plot device. Real people have jobs. You don't spend hours sipping cappuccinos and discussing your on-again, off-again love affairs in the middle of the afternoon; you actually have to work if you want to earn a living. Also, it's important to note that days at a real-life office aren't spent pranking each other with stationery in Jello moulds.

2. CHEERS: Where everybody knows your name. Your buddies don't hang out at one specific diner/coffee shop/bar all the time. Your social circle will be scattered across the city (or country) and you will rarely bump into your friends by chance. That's what Foursquare is for.

"Paleontologists do not look like Ross Geller. They just don't. On a related note: doctors don't look like Olivia Wilde and police officers rarely resemble Shemar Moore."

habit of chuckling after almost everything you say in an attempt encourage others to do the same. Or maybe that's just me? OK — moving on.

4. Everybody is attractive. Paleontologists do not look like Ross Geller. They just don't. On a related note: doctors don't look like Olivia Wilde and police officers rarely resemble Shemar Moore.

5. Ex-lovers only reappear in re-runs. Your ex-boyfriend is not a hunky guest star that disappears after a four-episode arc. You'll inevitably run into him, probably when you're on your way home from the gym or sick with a head cold.

6. Have you seen my awesome apartment? Twenty-somethings don't shack up with astonishingly attractive roommates in impossibly expensive 2,000-square-foot industrial lofts. It's more likely that you'll end up living in a modest rental unit with your parents' old furniture and a mouse problem.

7. Being single is the best! Singledom is hardly a slew of comical encounters with eccentric yet loveable characters; most first dates are awkward and entirely underwhelming — hilarity does not ensue. There are also plenty of lonely, miserable nights; they just don't show that on TV.

The Occupy Wall Street protests are:

Letters

The 99 per cent that Occupy Wall Street represent are demanding change and are gaining supporters from all walks of life.

In the past, the North American and European economies were dependent on an automobile sector, decent wages and population growth. Not to mention a need for consumers to keep on spending to keep the economy going. What is happening now is literally the opposite.

The gap between the rich and the poor is increasing dramatically.

The population is aging and there are less working people to support the government and society. Corporations are outsourcing jobs to countries like China and India. There are less decent-paid jobs now and unemployment is increasing. The people are no longer earning $30.00 per hour unless you work for the government. This is reducing consumer spending, saving, and increasing debt. The population is basically scrambling for minimum-wage jobs.

Occupy Wall Street is an interesting phenomenon because it reflects this anxiety.

'Excuse me officer, I was driving good'

Police say a Detroit-area man had his nine-year-old daughter drive him to the store because he had apparently been drinking.

Brownstown Township Detective Lt. Robert Grant said yesterday the girl was sitting behind the wheel in a child's booster seat before 3 a.m. on Oct. 8 when an officer opened the driver's side door of the full-sized panel van her father uses for work.

Grant tells the Detroit Free Press newspaper the girl said to the officer: "What did you stop me for? I was driving good."

Someone called police after spotting the pair stopped at a gas station. The caller watched the girl get in the driver's seat and pull the vehicle onto the road.

"She's driving pretty good, I'm telling ya. I can't believe it," the man told the dispatcher.

The father was arrested and is facing several charges, including second-degree child abuse.

The daughter told officers her father had been drinking whiskey all night and took her out to drive. "Very sweet, intelligent little girl," Grant said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Record sales for iPhone 4S

MODEL. Apple says it sold more than four million units of the new iPhone model in three days. It's selling more than twice as fast as the previous model when it launched last year.

Apple Inc. and its phone company partners started selling the iPhone 4S on Friday in the U.S., Australia, Canada, France, Germany, Japan and Britain. That's two more launch countries than last year.

There are also more phone companies selling the phone. In the U.S., Sprint Nextel Corp. is the new carrier.

When Apple launched the iPhone 4 last year, it sold 1.7 million in the first three days.

Apple shares fell $3 to $419 in afternoon trading at a new high of $426.70 earlier in the session.

The co-CEO of Research In Motion says the BlackBerry maker doesn't know yet what the final price tag will be for last week's global email, text and Internet outage.

Jim Balsillie says the Waterloo, Ont., company hasn't calculated the cost of offering BlackBerry users $100 in free apps and doesn't know yet how it will impact its earnings.

One analyst has estimated that if RIM were to compensate all carriers and customers for the down time of the BlackBerry network, its earnings would be negatively affected by three to five cents per share in the current quarter — a total of about $26 million.

Germany's top companies pledge to promote women

MICHAEL SOHN/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Germany's 30 top public companies pledged yesterday to increase the number of women who serve in top-level management positions during the next five years as the nation struggles to combat a shortage of qualified personnel by attracting more women to the workplace.

The pledges come six months after members of Chancellor Angela Merkel's government first sparked the idea that Germany lags far behind other industrialized nations in promoting women to its highest business positions — a problem it does not have on the political side.

Yet the government remains divided on the key issue of whether gender equality can and should be legislated.

Labour Minister Ursula von der Leyen welcomed the companies' efforts, but criticized them for falling short of what is needed to convince women that they can have a career in Germany that would be as rewarding as what they would be capable of abroad.

Germany ranks alongside India with only 2.2 per cent of women in boardrooms.

Smashing the past

► Billy Corgan talks new tour and his desire to bring the Smashing Pumpkins into the present

SCENE@METRONWS.CA
METRO WORLD NEWS IN NEW YORK

Billy Corgan is one of the titans of the '90s alternative rock scene. He's a polarizing figure in some circles, having issued a few controversial remarks in the past regarding his ex-band mates, with whom he no longer tours. But with a new set of musicians touring under the Smashing Pumpkins name, Corgan wants to bring the band into the present with his latest tour.

Does the music you write under the Smashing Pumpkins name differ from material you've written as Zwan or your self-titled work?

It's weird because the whole idea with the Pumpkins originally that evolved in the early days was more that it was supposed to be kind of an experimental excitement kind of thing whereas away from the Pumpkins, I tend to write a little bit more traditional music. [It's] probably a little more obvious in a way. For whatever reason, the Smashing Pumpkins, the idea of the band or the spirit of the band, has always pushed me to force myself out of my comfort zone. If it's just me, Billy Corgan, I guess I want to try different things. There's something about the way the band was formed as being in awe of rock 'n' roll but also wanting to destroy rock 'n' roll. That spirit still pervades everything that goes on with the Pumpkins. Somehow that only seems to exist under that banner.

So then, how does one destroy rock 'n' roll?

Maybe it's different now, but let's say 20 years ago there was sort of an unwritten rule that you don't talk about how fake rock 'n' roll really was. If you saw this interview with Iggy Pop and he was talking about these amazing books he was reading, people would scratch their heads and say, 'I thought he was kind of stupid and rolled around in glass.' They would be disappointed. So the Pumpkins came along and were willing to poke holes, particularly in the indie alternative world, in the facetiousness of the whole thing, this idea that we were all living in vans down by the river. It was this kind of fantasy that musicians were a subterranean class, were able to create works of incredible beauty or something. So we were just like, oh f— all that.

Where do you see innovation happening in music?

Honestly, I think in terms of predicting something, the future of rock 'n' roll is probably in mixed media. Because it always starts in the basement with a 16-year-old. What can she do to actually change rock 'n' roll? Maybe she figures out a very cheap, easy but creative way of combining moving image, a personal vision, and music. So imagine like, a 16-year-old girl puts out a 20 minute film that she did on her own of moving images, songs that she created and suddenly, a million teenage boys and girls connect to what she's doing, not just because of the song, but also the way she's cut the music and the sound effects, like a personal statement of her world but more three dimensional than say just music is. I think that's the future of rock 'n' roll.

In going into your back catalog as you kind of have to, are there any songs that you love playing again and are there songs you'd never play again?

Honestly, every time I tour, I look at the whole list and I go with what I feel. Songs we're playing on this tour, some songs I haven't played in like 17 years.

Like what? Which songs?

Oh, I can't give that away. But some songs you play and it's 'oh, it feels good to play this after 17 years.' But nothing's prohibitive. I love playing my songs. I've gotten a bad rap for being picky about what I'll play ... but it's weird because sometimes it's not so much that I don't want to play the song but it's the audience's expectations that effect what I want to play. I'll give you a perfect example. You'll play a new song that's a pretty good song, a song you have confidence that it's a pretty good song and the audience applauds and then you play a mediocre old song and the audience acts like it's the greatest song they've ever heard. As an artist, you're standing there saying, OK, that's not real. That's not a real reaction to what's happening. That's a memory-sensory reaction.

Green Lantern

Genre: Action

Director: Martin Campbell

Stars: Ryan Reynolds, Blake Lively, Peter Sarsgaard

Canada's Ryan Reynolds shines dimly as the Green Lantern, the summer actioner of the same name based on the DC Comic and directed by Martin Campbell.

Reynolds is Hal Jordan, a cocky test pilot who busts up billion-dollar prototypes just for the hell of it. Oh, and to impress Carol Ferris (Blake Lively) who plays a corporate scold, frustrated pilot and Jordan's occasional bedmate.

The buffed-up Reynolds proves to be an inspired hire. His Jordan manages to keep a straight face when he meets a dying purple alien who hands him a Crackerjack toy ring and advises: "The ring chose you."

For what? The slim story involves digital green Spandex and a tour of the outer cosmos, where Jordan confers with a gaggle of emerald-obsessed interplanetary cops who call themselves the Green Lantern Corps. They're ruled by the Guardians, one of whom has gone rogue and turned into a planet-eating smoke entity called Parallax. Jordan will have to fight Parallax to save Earth. Were you expecting anything less?

Reynolds shows promise in the role, if future installments of what's sure to be a franchise are able to scrape away some of the digital green goo that threatens to drown this film — which seems more Saturday morning cartoon than Friday night date — and deliver a more satisfying story. That will be hard to do with a series as loopy as this one.

Extras, mostly on the Blu-ray, include additional scenes, "Maximum Movie Mode," extended cut and making-off featurettes.

Bad Teacher

Genre: Comedy

Director: Jake Kasdan

Stars: Cameron Diaz, Jason Segel, Justin Timberlake

Bad Teacher instructs us that Cameron Diaz needs to return to comedy school: being pitiful isn't the same as being funny.

She plays Elizabeth, a seventh-grade English teacher at a suburban Illinois middle school. She's a free-spending floozy with a substance-abuse problem, untreated chronic depression and a near-sociopathic disregard for the needs and feelings of others, especially her students and fellow teachers.

Lack of suitability for her job doesn't matter much to Elizabeth; she plans to ditch it anyway, and marry her rich fiancé (Nat Faxon).

Writers Gene Stupnitsky and Lee Eisenberg (vets of TV's The Office) surround Elizabeth with one-dimensional sitcom types: a butt-covering principal (John Michael Higgins), an introvert with esteem issues (Lynn Davies), an extrovert with control issues (a game Lucy Punch) and a naïve supply teacher (Justin Timberlake, a former Diaz beau) who is as dim as a small appliance bulb.

Despite the extra talent, the main comedic course load falls to Diaz, who proves unable to bear the burden under Jake Kasdan's flat direction.

It's too bad for Diaz. She badly needed a hit after recent duds like The Green Hornet and Knight and Day.

Extras include deleted scenes, featurettes and unrated version of film (Blu-ray only).

'We're terrified of facing ourselves'

► Star Trek actor Zachary Quinto reveals sexuality ► Hopes to inspire others to be proud of who they are

For the first time, Zachary Quinto has opened up about being gay, explaining in an interview with New York magazine how much starring in the AIDS-themed Angels in America has affected him, calling it the "most challenging thing I've ever done as an actor, and the most rewarding."

At the same time, as a gay man, it made me feel like there's still so much work to be done, and there's still so many things that need to be looked at and addressed."

Quinto, who had previously refrained from comment on his sexuality, says he was compelled to do so after the suicide of bullied 14-year-old Jamie Rodemeyer.

"As a gay man, I look at that and say there's a hopelessness that surrounds it," he says. "But as a human being I look at it and say, 'Why? Where's this disparity coming from, and why can't we as a culture and society dig deeper to examine that?' We're terrified of facing ourselves."

► Before you take on barefoot running, be sure to ease into it.

Benefits of barefoot

► Running sans shoes has been catching on more in fitness circles ► But there are questions about why it could be good for you ► Experts suggest easing into a new style to avoid injury

CELIA MILNE
LIFE@METRONEWS.CA

Is barefoot beautiful?

It's becoming more common to see people running with bare feet or wearing super-light shoes.

But should you toe the line?

To find out if this is a more "natural" way to run, Metro contacted Dr. Reed Ferber (PhD), director of the Running Injury Clinic and an associate professor in kinesiology at the University of Calgary.

He believes at the moment the trend is driven more by marketing than health.

"There is no research to support that running barefoot, or in a minimalist shoe, will improve performance or reduce injury risk," he says.

Given time, research might reveal benefits. Dr. Dan Lieberman in the department of human evolutionary biology at Harvard University is studying how the naked foot lands during running versus how the shod foot lands, and what impact this has on the body.

He is trying to figure out why humans apparently need fancy shoes to run when they ran without them for eons.

One theory is that some people don't need elevated and highly cushioned heels because they land on their mid-foot or forefoot rather than their heel.

Dr. Ferber estimates that less than 10 per cent of the population has the proper anatomical alignment, adequate ankle stabilizer strength, and calf muscle flexibility to run in a barefoot-style shoe.

"The rest are at risk for injury unless they transition properly," he says.

If you are interested in switching to barefoot running, Dr. Ferber recommends easing into it over four to six weeks and taking a few months to regain your pre-switch mileage.

It's also important to do gentle calf raises after running to strengthen calves, which will be impacted differently when you run barefoot.

You'll never look at a cell the same way

► Some cellphones harbour E. coli bacteria, U.K. hand washing study finds ► So, maybe, don't take your phone into the bathroom any more

A new hand washing study has found cellphones teeming with bacteria — and some even harbour the sort of germs that should give people an incentive to scrub better after visiting the washroom.

Sixteen per cent of hands and mobile phones examined for the study, conducted in 12 cities in the United Kingdom, were found to carry E. coli, which originates in fecal matter and can cause diarrhea and vomiting.

"We sent some of my students up and down the length and breadth of the country with a number of swabs, and they swabbed hands and the mobile phones associated with them, and they brought their swabs back ... to identify the prime organisms," said Ron Cutler, director of biomedical science for degree programs at Queen Mary, University of London.

"One of the major relationships was that basically if your hands are very dirty, then your phone tends to be also very contaminated with the same type of bacteria," Cutler said Friday.

An analysis found 92 per cent of phones and 82 per cent of hands had traces of some type of bacteria on them.

The truth about parabens

When you see 'Paraben free' on a beauty product's label, you might assume that parabens are a bad thing.

But it's not as clear cut as that, and it's a subject that our beauty editor Rhonda Rovon explores in the October issue of Best Health.

For example, is there truth to the claims that these synthetic preservatives — which extend a product's life by stopping fungus, bacteria and other microbes from growing in creams and makeup, especially in the moist, warm environment of a bathroom — cause cancer?

What does Health Canada say?

In products without parabens as a preservative, the replacement is often another chemical preservative, called phenoxyethanol.

Is it better and safer?

And what about natural preservatives like turmeric, clove bud, rosemary, etc; are they effective, and are they a practical solution?

It's a fascinating subject, because without preservatives, we may all end up with refrigerators in our bathrooms that store our products so they don't spoil. The answers to the above questions, and much more, are in Rhonda's hefty feature in the Look Great section of the October issue, which is on newsstands now.

ALL THAT STRESS IS NOT GOOD FOR YOUR ORAL HEALTH TOO!

For the last couple of years now, we have been dealing with such negative economic news. Many people feel the pinch of this news as they either face layoffs from their jobs or there is a threat of such layoffs persistently hanging overhead. And this can be stressful!

Most of us are aware that stress can affect our hearts and our blood pressure. But many of you may not be aware that stress can also affect your oral health.

The impact of stress on oral health may be indirect. For instance, people under stress are more likely to neglect their hygiene routines or make unhealthy food choices. Bad eating habits can creep in as we search for "comfort foods". Unfortunately, comfort foods tend to be high in sugar which is never friendly for our teeth.

When those sugary foods are combined with the tendency of individuals under stress to forgo regular brushing and/or flossing, more sticky food particles can be left on the teeth. This can attract the bacteria that lead to tooth decay and gum disease.

Individual under stress are also more likely to grind their teeth, particularly while they sleep. This is known as bruxism and it can lead to headaches, earaches, chronic facial pain and even the uneven wearing of the teeth. Many people suffering from bruxism wear night guards while they sleep to help alleviate the symptoms.

Dr. David Lui

Even dry mouth and cankers can result from stress. Cankers tend to be harmless, albeit rather painful. As for dry mouth, the loss of the cleansing effects of saliva can result in bad breath and other more serious oral health issues, such as biofilm, tartar and the gum disease they can produce.

Of course, stress can compromise your immune system. And when immune systems are not working efficiently, gum disease can become a problem. Your body needs to be operating efficiently in order to combat the bacteria that attacks it from all directions, including the mouth. The stronger your immune system, the more ready you are to do battle with the multiple species of bacteria that find the mouth to be a wonderful home!

Just remember that smiling is one of the simplest ways to help alleviate stress. But if poor oral health has left you with a smile you would rather not show off, you are less likely to take advantage of this form of stress relief. So talk to your dentist if you are experiencing any of these conditions due to stress...and let your dentist help you put on a smile that will keep that stress away!

Because alleviating stress is a healthy habit...and healthy habits lead to healthy lives.

The broth was rich, and the bowl was overflowing with lentils along with carrots and potatoes for good measure. It was hearty, vel-

They come in slippery, tongue-twisting names such as "choklabboll". And they are spreading across North America.

They are the sweets of Scandinavia; treats once relegated mostly to the Midwest, where Norwegians and Swedes settled. But in recent years, stores specializing in the confections have increasingly shown up in urban areas. Make your own.

Money can't buy you love

► Materialism in spouses hard on marriage, study says

It seems that being a material girl — or guy — can be hard on a marriage, especially if both spouses place a high value on money and accumulating possessions, research suggests.

In a study by Brigham Young University, researchers found that materialism in a spouse was associated with lower levels of responsiveness to the partner, less emotional maturity, poor communication and higher levels of conflict.

The study, published Thursday in the Journal of Couple & Relationship Therapy, also found that love of money in one or both spouses led to reduced satisfaction in the relationship and threatened the marriage's stability.

"We did find that materialism is harmful to marriage and that the effect of it seems to be widespread," lead author Jason Carroll, a professor of family life at Brigham Young in Provo, Utah, said in an interview. "This is more of an erosion pattern, rather than a land-fall pattern."

Carroll said couples in which both spouses reported not caring about money — about 14 per cent of the group — scored 10 to 15

"If we prioritize relationships and keep them at the top of our focus, that really helps us from getting sucked into the materialistic messages in the culture and helps us get to where true happiness will be found."

per cent higher on marriage stability and other measures of relationship quality than did couples where one or both are materialistic.

The effect was particularly pronounced when both the husband and wife worshipped at the altar of consumerism, as was the case in about 20 per cent of participants.

"Couples where both spouses are materialistic were worse off on nearly every measure we looked at," he said.

The study involved 1,734 married couples across the United States. Each spouse filled out a questionnaire, which included a self-report on how much he or she values "having money and lots of things."

Researchers expected there would be more conflict and lower marital satisfaction when there was a mismatch in values between partners, with one being materialistic and the other not, Carroll said.

"However, our study found that it's actually the couples where both have high levels of materialism that struggled the most," he said. "So even when spouses were unified in that value stance, they were the couples that (fared the worst)."

Carroll said being materialistic could lead some people to spend more than they can afford, creating debt and financial stress that can wear away the emotional glue that holds couples together. The focus by one spouse on money and what it can buy can also leave the partner feeling neglected and unhappy, he suggested.

With fears about the volatile economy, those whose happiness relies on augmenting and showing off their possessions may have difficulty if forced to tighten their belts, he said.

Selling old gold and silver jewelry? The bad. The ugly. The good.

Skyrocketing gold and silver prices has many consumers wondering how much their old or broken gold jewelry is worth.

The question you should be asking yourself is: where do you go to ensure you receive a fair offer? There are plenty of options but which ones pass the common sense test?

Option #1: New companies. Inflated promises. False advertising.

Anyone can post really high payout prices. There are no laws to protect unsuspecting consumers from misleading ads that promise to pay outrageous and unrealistic prices.

They use them to lure people in, then adjust weights, inaccurately evaluate material (eg. say something is 10kt when it's actually 14kt). The bottom line, people end up with less money in their pocket, not more.

Option #2: Mail away your gold. Hope for the best.

Most consumers feel uneasy about mailing their jewellery to one of the many flashy "Cash for Gold" type companies seen on TV. The truth is, several of these companies have received harsh criticism from consumer advocacy groups because of their notoriously shady sales tactics and low payouts.

So, if those ads featuring cash waving "customers" send a chill down your spine, it's for good reason.

Option #3: Recycle Frog, you be the judge.

Recycle Frog is an Ottawa-based precious metals recycling company that has built its business by serving today's more prudent middle and upper-middle-class consumer. Comprised primarily of ex-Royal Canadian Mint employees, Recycle Frog's payout rates are published, and consistently rank among the highest in the industry.

One-on-one evaluations are conducted at their many convenient public events or are pre-scheduled at their World Exchange Plaza location. They're a trusted fundraising partner to various charitable organizations including the United Way, CHEO, Christmas Exchange and The Canadian Cancer Society.

► Financial preparedness is essential for mothers.

Among the 2,115 Canadians who participated in the 2011 Desjardins Financial Security Health Survey, 67 per cent said that an illness would make them financially vulnerable.

Another 77 per cent who live with children were afraid that they would use up their savings during recovery, leaving no money for their children's education.

The survey also pointed out that women fear the potentially devastating effects of cancer more than any other serious illness.

"What's interesting is that women today are able to assert their independence by their lifestyle and career choices, but many still find financial planning to be very stressful," said Janey Leslie, a certified financial planner with Desjardins Financial Security.

"Statistically, women live longer than men, they play a key role in family care-giving and decision-making, but they are often in a more vulnerable financial position. So, it's essential that women become better prepared financially in case of an emergency, like a serious illness."

Every working mother with dependants should have a financial safety plan that includes three distinct layers, says Leslie.

1. Disability insurance: It's a valuable, must-have protection that pays a regular benefit based on the person's monthly salary, which can be used to cover everyday financial commitments.

2. Extended medical insurance: Even with the protection of disability insurance, many women are not able to pay for all of the drugs and treatments associated with a serious illness.

And it's important to point out that they also may not be covered by their provincial health care system.

An extended medical insurance plan is an excellent protection against these high costs.

3. Critical illness insurance: It's often the missing piece of the puzzle, but luckily it's a product that's growing in popularity.

In fact, sales of critical illness insurance in Canada

WHAT'S THE BOTTOM LINE ON MORTGAGE BROKERS?

FUN AND FRUGAL

LESLEY SCORGIE
MONEY@METRONEWS.CA

There are over 400 types of mortgage products on the market and it's hard to know whether you're selecting the right one. That's why Canadians are using independent mortgage brokers at an alarming rate because mortgage brokers can save you time and money!

An independent mortgage broker isn't tied to any financial institution and instead works on behalf of you, the client, rather than the lender. Because they are not employees of a lending institution, mortgage brokers are not limited in the product they can offer you.

They can seek out the best mortgage options to suit your specific situation, from a multitude of lenders — banks, trusts, private companies, or insurance firms. Their primary role is to provide unbiased mortgage options and advice to clients.

Mortgage brokers can get better deals on mortgages, terms and rates because they have direct access to lenders. Once you've met with one, they'll prepare a funding proposal and shop it around to get the best and most appropriate mortgage options.

Brokers with strong networks can often get nearly instant approvals and they can negotiate better rates and terms on your behalf.

In the vast majority of cases, clients don't have to pay for the services of a mortgage broker. Instead, when the broker matches a lender with a buyer and a mortgage is placed, the broker is paid by the lender. Their paycheck is based on the size of the mortgage, not the rate.

Major financial institutions have groups of in-house "mortgage brokers". But they're different from independent brokers as they sell clients mortgage products that are exclusive to the bank. If you're keen to stay loyal to your bank, you can ask your independent mortgage broker to negotiate specifically with your financial institution.

Be careful who you choose to work with. Not all brokers are great and have their client's best interests in mind. Get referrals from trusted friends or family members. Research current rates and structures in advance of meeting with a broker. That way you'll have some idea of what you're hoping to achieve and can clearly communicate it.

YOUR PARTNER IN BUSINESS

BMO CONSIDERS BOTH PERSONAL AND PROFESSIONAL LIVES

You don't just run a small business — you live it.

For too long, banks have treated small business owners as though their personal and professional lives were separate. But one happens to impact the other. And that's why BMO considers both before offering you banking solutions.

Here's one example of how we do it.

JAMES: I run a business as an electrician. Things were OK when I started out, but then the recession hit. All of a sudden, my customers couldn't make their payments on time.

I started working longer hours, which hurt my family. I began to realize how much balance my wife and children brought to my life — the less I saw them, the worse my situation felt.

Business kept going south. I considered relaxing my repayment terms (giving customers 60 or 90 days to pay me back, instead of 30), but that wouldn't have solved my cash-flow problem. So I started looking for new customers in a down market.

The more hours I spent doing that, the fewer I spent at home.

I needed help.

CELEBRATE SMALL BUSINESS WEEK

BMO is celebrating Small Business Week 2011, and you're invited to the party. This week, more than 400 participating BMO branches will be hosting their own Biz Cafés: Local events across the country to thank small business owners (like you) for their achievements. It's an opportunity to celebrate with the experts who can help owners grow their business.

JOE COLLURA, BMO SMALL BUSINESS AREA

MANAGER: I remember James. We had a long conversation.

He did most of the talking. He told me about his business and how much it meant to him.

He explained the solutions he'd tried, which weren't working.

When he'd finished, I asked him how all this affected him personally. James was surprised by that. I explained to him that at BMO, we look for solutions that solve problems at home, as well as on the job. They aren't really separate.

That got him talking a lot more. And it gave me an idea.

James had never before operated on credit. He never thought to ask for it. So I convinced him to fund his business through a Small Business Line of Credit. This allowed him to meet his financial obligations and cover any temporary shortfalls of cash. It also made his hours more predictable, letting him get home to his family in good time. Six months later, his business had turned around.

A week to show their strengths

► Senators hope to put aside struggles with slate of home games ► ‘It’s about results’: Phillips

The Ottawa Senators think it’s about time to pull out of their early season slide.

With just one win in their first five games, Ottawa is facing a week that includes three games on home ice at Scotiabank Place. They host Philadelphia tonight, Winnipeg on Thursday and Columbus on Saturday.

“You look at our record and we need to start getting some points,” said veteran defenceman Chris Phillips. “We made some good strides last game. I thought we played well and maybe deserved better, but it’s about results and we need to get up there in the standings.”

Other than an ugly 7-1 loss to the Colorado Avalanche, the Senators have managed to keep games close. But Ottawa has struggled early in games, getting outscored 15-3 in the first and second periods.

It’s tempting to chalk up the struggles to the several new faces in the lineup, but Phillips doesn’t believe it’s that simple.

“We’re not going to use that as an excuse,” he said. “We have the talent, the guys are capable and everyone’s shown their ability and that’s why we’re all here. It is a little adjustment playing with different guys and what not, but we’re all familiar with the system and we know what’s expected of us and we have to go out and get the results we’re looking for.”

To improve, the Senators need younger players to contribute, including Mika Zibanejad, who is running out of time to prove he belongs in the NHL. Zibanejad has played all five games, giving the team four more to decide whether to send him back to Sweden or keep him for the season.

“I think Mika can play in the NHL,” said MacLean. “It’s whether or not we decide it’s going to be right now for the rest of the year or next year.”

MacLean admits the final decision hasn’t been made, but it’s likely Zibanejad’s performance this week will play a huge factor in his future. THE CANADIAN PRESS

It was Indy where the 33-

He won the Indianapolis 500 driving for Michael Andretti’s team in 2005 and won it again in May for Bryan Herta’s team.
